

CONTRIBUTORS

Simon J. Bronner, a former folklore student at Indiana University and editor of Folklore Forum, received his Ph.D. in 1981. He teaches courses on folklore and American studies at The Pennsylvania State University, Capitol Campus.

Timothy Evans is a graduate student of folklore at Indiana University and managing editor of Folklore Forum.

Wm. F. Hansen, Associate Professor of Classical Studies and Fellow of the Folklore Institute, has just completed a book on the medieval legend of Hamlet.

Jeanne Harrah is a graduate student of folklore at Indiana University, Archivist at the Indiana University Archives of Folklore, and co-editor of Folklore Forum.

Bengt Holbek teaches folklore at Copenhagen University and is associated with the Institut for Folkemindevidenskab. He was previously employed at the Dansk Folkemindesamling, the Danish Folklore Archives.

Ronald R. Smith is Associate Professor of Folklore at Indiana University. He is currently Director of the Ethnomusicology Program and has done extensive fieldwork on traditional music in Latin America.

Gerald Strauss, Professor of History at Indiana University, has published works on sixteenth century German history.

Paul Tyler is a graduate student of folklore at Indiana University. He has done fieldwork in traditional music throughout Indiana and elsewhere.

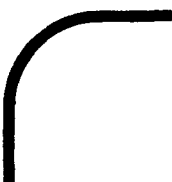

Ricardas Vidutis, a doctoral candidate in the Folklore Department at Indiana University, did fieldwork in the Calumet Region of Northwest Indiana on an NEH grant. A native of Gary, Indiana, his special interests include ethnicity, fieldwork methods, and semiotics.

Peter Voorheis, a Ph.D. candidate in folklore at Indiana University, whose research interests include Russian folklore, is translation editor of Folklore Forum. He is the editor of a festschrift for Felix J. Oinas.

John Wolford is a graduate student of folklore at Indiana University and the assistant managing editor of Folklore Forum. His research interests include folk religion.

Egle Victoria Žygas is a doctoral candidate in folklore at Indiana University. She is currently employed at the Indiana Arts Commission as Folk Arts Coordinator.

For a complete listing of back issues of

FOLKLORE FORUM

and issues of

BIBLIOGRAPHIC AND SPECIAL SERIES

please write

Folklore Forum

504 NORTH FESS STREET
BLOOMINGTON, INDIANA 47401

