Program Notes

Chasing for orchestra is about the action between the chaser and the chased. It has three part form with two contrasting ideas, chasing and relaxation. The beginning section of this piece sounds like a starting gun in a running race. Its harmonic language consists of overlapping tonal materials (major and minor triad chords) and they start to disperse and diffuse through the section. After the fast running, there is a brief pause for the relaxation and preparation. It might be for taking time to catch one's breath before the coming race. In this section, the very linear flute solo sounds like it tries to arrive on the main pitch (G flat), however it fails to achieve the goal. After this preparation, another section of chasing begins with the fragment of beginning material. In this section, the polymeter is used to enhance the sense of velocity (3/4 and 6/8). At the same time, the pitch and melody line are contributing to this by focusing on its main pitch, E, although they never arrive at their main goal, pitch E. The chasing becomes more intense through the modification and development, and the final section of this piece depicts the end of the chasing. The pitches derived from the previous triad chords are now completely dispersed finally. The ending of chasing will be a great achievement and fulfilling experience after a fierce chasing for the chaser, while it is the time of execution for the one being trailed by the chaser.

Chasing is composed and dedicated to P. Q. Phan, a great composer and professor who has helped me to compose my own music with musical and emotional support and made me a better musician in every way.
