

Contributors

Marianne Barnett is a Ph.D. student in the Department of English at the University of Utah, where she also teaches.

John Dorst is a professor of folklore and American Studies at the University of Wyoming. He is the author of numerous articles and a recent book, The Written Suburb: An American Site, An Ethnographic Dilemma.

Henry Glassie is president of the American Folklore Society, College Professor at Indiana University, and author of numerous articles and books.

Jennifer Livesay is a Ph.D. candidate in folklore at Indiana University. She is a former co-editor of Folklore Forum.

Elisabeth Panttaja, a magna cum laude graduate of Brown University, received a master's degree in English and American Literature from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. Now a Ph.D. student at Brandeis University in Massachusetts, she is writing a doctoral dissertation on father/daughter relationships in the fairytale and in 19th- and early 20th-century female Bildungsroman.

Patricia Sawin is a Ph.D. candidate in folklore at Indiana University, where she is writing her doctoral dissertation on an Appalachian woman's performance of self through traditional genres. She is the former editor of Folklore Women's Communication, the newsletter of the women's section of the American Folklore Society.

Gregory Schrempf is a professor of folklore at Indiana University, where his interests include the study of Polynesian and Native American cultures.