

While this sales pitch may be well intentioned, the potential for self-aggrandizement ought to be resisted: the impecuniousness of musicians makes it only partly forgivable.

CONTRIBUTORS

John Bendix is a Ph.D. candidate in the Department of Political Science at Indiana University. He has been the backbone of the Forum typing team for the last two years and the editors are sorry to see him leave for fieldwork in Germany.

Regina Bendix is a Ph.D. candidate in the Folklore Institute at Indiana University. As soon as this issue is at the printer, she'll leave for fieldwork in Switzerland.

Tina Bucuvalas is a Ph.D. candidate in the Folklore Institute at Indiana University and is currently finishing her dissertation.

Tim Cochrane is a Ph.D. candidate in the Folklore Institute at Indiana University.

Hugo A. Freund is a Ph.D. student in the Department of Folklore and Folklife at the University of Pennsylvania. He is currently finishing a dissertation on a family's Thanksgiving celebration.

Gregory Hansen is currently working on the Kentucky Folk Project at the Kentucky Center for the Arts. He eventually plans to complete the remaining three quarters of his master's thesis so that he can no longer claim to be a student at Western Kentucky University.

Bruce Harrah-Conforth is a Ph.D. student in the Folklore Institute at Indiana University. He currently works at the Indiana University Archives. Together with fellow fieldworkers Garry Barrow and Will Wheeler, he is completing a project on the blues tradition in Indianapolis.

Muhamadu Sani Ibrahim teaches in the Department of Nigerian Languages at Bayero University, Kano, Nigeria.

Eric Montenyohl is a Ph.D. candidate in the Folklore Institute at Indiana University.

Enoch Timpunza Mvula is a Ph.D. student in the Folklore Institute at Indiana University.

Martha Norkunas is a Ph.D. student in the Folklore Institute at Indiana University. She recently finished a video tape on the textile mills in Lowell, MA, entitled "And That's How We Did It In The Mills."

Felix J. Oinas is a Fellow of the Folklore Institute and a retired Professor of Slavics at Indiana University.

Carl Rahkonen is a Ph.D. candidate in the Folklore Institute at Indiana University.

Barry W. Rosen is a Ph.D. candidate in the Department of Comparative Literature at Indiana University.

Patricia Sawin is a Ph.D. student at the Center for Intercultural Studies in Folklore and Oral History at the University of Texas.

Audrey C. Shalinsky is Assistant Professor of Anthropology at the University of Wyoming, Laramie.

Liana Stanton is a Romanian émigré and holds a Ph.D. in English Literature from the University of Miami.

Frank Wright is a Ph.D. candidate in the Department of Linguistics at Indiana University. He is currently finishing his dissertation based on fieldwork in Nigeria.

* * * * *

NOW AVAILABLE FROM TRICKSTER PRESS:

Log Buildings of Southern Indiana

by

Warren E. Roberts

Price: $15.00 ($10.00 for students)

include $1.00 for shipping

Address all orders to: Trickster Press,
504 N. Fess, Bloomington, IN 47405.