

CONTRIBUTORS

Inta Carpenter is a research assistant for Dr. Richard M. Dorson, and is presently completing work for the Master of Arts degree in folklore at Indiana University.

Jerry Cashion is pursuing graduate studies in African and American oral, kinesic, and material folklore at the Folklore Institute of Indiana University.

F. A. de Caro ; one of the founders of the Folklore Forum, is an assistant professor of folklore at Louisiana State University.

Sandra Brown Eminov is a doctoral candidate in folklore at Indiana University and a Chinese folklore specialist who is also interested in English and Scottish folk ballads.

Andrea Greenberg is an associate instructor in folklore at Indiana University and a previous contributor to the Folklore Forum on several occasions.

Mary Ellen B. Lewis holds the Ph. D. in folklore and folklife from the University of Pennsylvania and is currently an assistant professor of folklore at Indiana University.

W. K. McNeil is a doctoral candidate in folklore at Indiana University in the midst of completing his dissertation on the history of American folklore scholarship.

Warren E. Roberts is professor of folklore at Indiana University, whose specialty is material folklife and culture.

Douglas Rutherford is an undergraduate student pursuing folklore studies through the Independent Learning Program at Indiana University. A research grant took him to the Republic of Mali during the summer of 1972 to study the music of the Mande hunters' bard

Richard Sweterlitsch is a doctoral candidate in folklore at Indiana University currently completing his dissertation on the outlaw hero in American society.

Anya Taylor is an assistant professor of English at C. U. N. Y. and has a book on magic in Romanticism forthcoming.

Karen H. Thorsen is an art instructor at Trenton State College in New Jersey. Ms. Thorsen is an artist, as well as a specialist in folk art, presently completing the doctoral requirements in the Folklore and Folklife Program at the University of Pennsylvania

Mary Arnold Twining is an assistant professor of folklore at the Georgia State University and a specialist in African and Afro-American oral and material folklore.