

INDIANA GENEALOGY

The Bond Family

By EDWIN C. CHAPMAN

Bond families live in the following Indiana Counties; Wayne, Henry, Randolph, and LaPorte. Many of them are descended from Joseph Bond, an English Quaker, who came to America by or before 1735, landing in Philadelphia. He seems to have settled in Bucks County, Pennsylvania, and there to have married Martha Rogers also of English origin. She came to America along with her family on the same ship that brought Joseph Bond. The two families may have been acquainted in England, or it may be that the association on shipboard led to the later marriage. At any rate, the marriage took place about 1739. To Joseph and Martha Bond, who lived on a farm, were born five children while they lived in Pennsylvania. The family became members of the Monthly Meeting of Friends in Bucks County.

About 1750, when many Friends were migrating to North Carolina, Joseph Bond with his family went to that colony. They settled in Guilford County and became members of Center Monthly Meeting. Two additional children were born in the new home, bringing the number to seven. It is not certain when either Joseph Bond or his wife died, but there is a tradition among descendants that both died about 1760 and were buried in unmarked graves in the Guilford Cemetery.

Most of the Bond children lived to rear large families. Some of them remained in North Carolina. As was natural, some of them moved westward to Tennessee. One at least came to Indiana, where he died in 1821. This was Edward Bond who was the father of nine children, most, or all, of whom came to Indiana during 1809 and 1810 when many Friends migrated to the Territory.

Genealogical records relative to various members of the Bond family follow:
