The National Register of Historic Places is a list of districts, sites, buildings, and structures that have significance in American national, state, or local heritage and have been designated as worth preservation.

The quality of significance in American history, architecture, archeology, and culture is present in districts, sites, buildings, structures, and objects that possess integrity of location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association, and: (A) that are associated with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of our history; or (B) that are associated with the lives of persons significant in the past; or (C) that embody the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction, or that represent the work of a master, or that possess high artistic values, or that represent a significant and distinguishable entity whose components may lack individual distinction; or (D) that have yielded or may be likely to yield, information important in history or pre-history.¹

Items nominated for the National Register of Historic Places are initially evaluated by the State Review Board for Historic Preservation which is chaired by Joseph D. Cloud, director of the Indiana Department of Natural Resources and appointed by the governor as state historic preservation officer.² After approval by the state board the applications are signed by the state historic preservation officer and forwarded to Washington, D.C., for final review by the staff of the National Register of Historic Places.

The following is a list of those districts, sites, buildings, and structures in Indiana which had been enrolled and were on the National Register as of December 31, 1974. One asterisk indicates that the property is a state memorial or that the historic district includes a state memorial; two asterisks indicate that the site is designated as a National Historic Landmark; and three indicate that the property is both. The date of acceptance is given in parentheses except for items designated as National Historic Landmarks prior to 1966. The editor of the Indiana Magazine of History and Eric Gilbertson, assistant state historic preservation officer, would appreciate information about apparent omissions or possible errors.
