Amy Reese

he fashioned something out of wire to affix the crucifix to the wall he bent over it, bending the wire meticulously lovingly forming each bend so that it might exactly hold the aged wood exactly hold god to him against the cold stone of the wall as he held his heart - in the narrow infirm beam slanting in through the window with the first late light of winter