A Critical Life

She inhales a life that doesn’t belong to her and in her mind everything is wrong to her knowing that they won’t understand how it feels to lose Someone they love, at their own hands
She cries trying to figure out How and why it happened Hearing the laughter come From the mouths of those who judge from those who’s main priority is to make her business, theirs
The pastor was right life really ain’t fair Pain sears her like the wound on the lifeless She never thought life was like this And at night she cries trying to hide the pain trying to figure out how to make it through the next day Wishing she could breathe life to the ones without it
And the one she - accidentally took this, whole experience has her mind, shook.
Wishing it was her God decided to take Instead, it was someone else
And she felt like her life was a mistake
The doctors should have been right When they were shoving tubes and IVs in that baby on the table, trying to help her breathe Right then God could have quickly put her to ease.
But now, she breathes
And as she looks at the lives around her, she wonders why God couldn’t have made, them suffer, the way she is, now Who were they to try to bring her down.
Thoughts run through her head playing over and over again
The pain and hurt
from the words
That the devil let slide out of those people’s mouths It felt like God turned His back and she needed Him now Trying to stay strong as the world hits her harder every day
trying its best to erase her from the life She, thinks she doesn’t deserve And who were those people to call her names trying to put her to shame When they didn’t even know the full story - Wishing she could let it out and let them know but trapped in the mind those emotions don’t show She doesn’t let them see that she’s a wilted flower.
She doesn’t let them know that every night before she goes to sleep, she Prays to God to let her trade Places with the deceased,
that she sits in her room and cries at night because She can’t find the reason as to why things went wrong
And to her the sweetest song Was seeing his smile and hearing his voice call out her name She gets angry at herself because it was a mistake, wishing the world would take a chance to hear her out instead of treating her like she doesn’t
Because they don’t know that when she lays her head down at night, she has to fight to keep it together.
But for now she just thinks of how much better life on Earth would be if she could hold him, and kiss his little brown cheeks like she used to do when she was the only one who cared enough to take care of a child that wasn’t even hers And she writes to form the words her heart won’t let her speak She writes about not even half of the drama that goes on in her life. Now A mistake, Placed on the most unusual face That girl, is me.
